

Wireframes illustrate feature presence, approximate placement, terminology, and page grid. Fonts, colors, precise layout, and graphic styling are left up to the graphic artists. Blue text are links or live text. Gray rectangles are images.

Show the number of elements in each content category. Each is a link back to this page with a narrowed search.

When search results are sorted by "relevance," what really happens is:

- * relevance is binned;
- * within a relevance bin, items are sorted by category
- * category order goes from large to small, i.e. franchise, titles, issues; then the miscellaneous categories (publishers, talent, reviews, etc.)

Footer not shown. Pagination control should be present at bottom of listing, as well as the top. (<Prev 1 2 3 4 ... 32 Next>)

Breadcrumbs should show the full search narrowing. If the reader now clicks "Reviews: 19", it should read "Home > Search for x-men > Reviews" Also, all components should be links, except the last one (representing the current page).

Categories containing no results for this search should be grayed-out and not clickable. This preserves the spatial layout of the category box.

Clicking the image or title will bring the user to the Item/Detail page, shown in a separate wireframe.

Clicking "Subscribe" will add the subscription to the reader's cart, and will show a tiny popup saying so, to help the reader know what to do next (i.e. checkout).

Clicking "RSS" will add this item to the reader's RSS feed, and will show a tiny popup saying so.

Clicking "Buy" (not shown) will add this item to the reader's cart, and will show a tiny popup saying so.

User has already clicked "Buy," so the text greys out and changes to "In cart". Likewise, "Subscribe" can grey out when the logged-in user is already subscribed; same for the RSS link.
